Passage (Read Carefully)

Arjun was always curious about how things worked. He loved taking apart old toys and trying to fix them again. One day, his science teacher announced a school exhibition where students could present their own projects. Arjun was excited and decided to build something unique.

After thinking for a while, he decided to create a simple machine that could lift small objects using a pulley system. He gathered materials like strings, small wheels, and cardboard from his home. At first, his machine did not work properly. The string kept slipping, and the wheel would not turn smoothly.

Instead of giving up, Arjun kept trying different ideas. He watched videos, read books, and even asked his teacher for help. Slowly, he improved his design. After several attempts, his machine finally worked perfectly. It could lift small objects with ease.

On the day of the exhibition, Arjun explained his project confidently to the judges. He showed them how the pulley system made lifting objects easier. The judges were impressed by his effort and creativity. Arjun won the first prize for his project.

More than the prize, Arjun felt proud of himself for not giving up. He learned that patience, hard work, and curiosity can help solve even difficult problems.
